

5 tips for writing your COLLEGE ESSAY

Admission committees read your college essay to get to know you – the person beyond the grades and perhaps the test scores. Understandably, you may be unsure where to start. But you already have a great start because you've had a lot of practice getting to know the subject of your essay –YOU!

1.

These help the admission committees learn how you will contribute to the campus community. Think of them as ways to show your character, aspirations and what you care about.

2. B

When you know you want to apply to a particular school, read the essay requirements and prompts. Think about how you can showcase what you will bring to campus. What do you want to say about yourself? Outline and organize your thoughts. Write a rough draft.

Share your story in your voice and words. Tell us something only you can tell us. This is an essay about you. Brag about yourself. For example, tell us about some of your proudest moments – but don't sound arrogant. Show us why you are confident in your ability to contribute positively.

In addition to admission committees, your essay could be read by alumni, retired faculty and others with a variety of interests, opinions and backgrounds. Give them a fresh perspective informed by your experiences. And be sure to not insult someone who is not like you. The opening paragraph of your essay should grab our attention and help us know what to expect. Remember: your essay is often used in consideration for scholarships, the honors program and certain majors, too.
